HAUPTMANN'S BLOOD PRESSURE IS SAID TO BE VERY LOW

If Prisoner "Breaks" It Is More Likely To Be Physical Than Mental

PHYSICIANS EXAMINE

Appetite Good, But Sleep
Rather Fitful; Mental Control Remarkable

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Dec. 31—If Richard Hauptmann breaks, he is more likely to break physically than mentally.

Dr. Floyd Ashley Thomas, one of the three physicians who had examined Hauptmann in the Hunterdon county jail made this assertion to International News Service in an interview today. He pointed out Haupt-mann's blood pressure is extremely low for a man 37 years of age.

"His mental control is remarkable," said Dr. Thomas, "his physical condition however is handicapped by his low blood pressure."

But Hauptmann, on the eve of his trial for the murder of the kidnapped Lindbergh baby shows no signs of "breaking." He seems as iron-nerved as ever and outwardly his physical condition appears to be all right.

His appetite is good and according to H. L. McCrea, warden of the jail, he has gained three pounds in the past few weeks. Yet he sleeps rather fit-tfully.

Dr. Thomas recalled when he and two other physicians examined the prisoner on November 20th Hauptmann showed a tendency toward dizziness which can be traced to his low blood pressure. "When Hauptmann stands any length of time he shows a tendency to fall toward his left side," said Dr. Thomas.

CROYDON

The Christmas entertainment given
Saturday night at Wilkinson Memorial
M. E. Church by the Sunday School was a delightful success. A play entitled "Trimming the Christmas Tree" was presented by a group of junior girls. This was followed by recitations from many of the scholars, principally the primary department. After a Christmas carol by the Ladies' Bible class, a cantata, "The Search For Santa Claus" was presented. After his arrival, gifts and candy were given to each scholar. The adults, as well as the children, shared in this Yuletide night.

Miss Dorothy Waters was a visitor
in Croydon on Sunday.

Mrs. Harry Collins has been very ill since Thursday.

CONTINUE RESCUE EFFORTS

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 31—Aided by merciful daylight, rescue parties today fought from three points on the compass under near Arctic conditions, toward the sight on an Adirondack mountainside where the four riders of a disabled American Airlines plane have been marooned since Friday night. Although previous reports suggested the half-frozen band of survivors had already been reached, no definite word to this effect had been received this forenoon. However, it was pointed out even if a rescue expedition had contacted the stranded flyers, it would be some time before the fact could be relayed to the outside world.

The crashed plane with its four flyers was spotted by searching flyers on the mountain slope near the border of Herkimer and Hamilton counties, near Gloversville, N. Y. Sacks containing coffee, food and brandy were dropped close to the fire around which the survivors huddled during the night, by a plane of the New Jersey National Guard.

"We are absolutely certain we have located the missing plane," Paul Garrow of the American Air Lines terminal in Newark airport, said today.

HOME WRECKED BY BOMB

Philadelphia, Dec. 31—Exploding with a detonation heard for miles around, a bomb, tossed from a speeding automobile, wrecked the home of Augustine Cairdullo, 60 in the Germantown section early today. The blast was felt over an area of several city blocks. It shattered hundreds of windows and tossed Cairdullo, his wife and several other persons in the house from their beds and showered them with broken glass and plaster.
No one was injured, however. Cair-dullo was unable to ascribe a motive for the attack.

STEEL PAYROLLS UP

New York City, Dec. 31—Employment and payrolls of the steel industry in November showed increases over preceding months, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported today. The industry employed 381,663 last month compared with 381,431 in October. In November a year ago 399,569 were employed. The November payrolls totaled $32,937,099 as against $32,723,909 in October and $32,671,986 in November a year ago.

MAJOR ADAMS GIVES SUGGESTIONS FOR 1935

Offers Two Resolutions For
The Average Citizen To Aid Police

RECITES THE LAW

(Note: Recent anti-crime conferences such as the one called by Attorney General Homer Cummings have focused nationwide attention upon the part the average citizen can play in suppressing law violation. In the following article, Major Lynn G. Adams, veteran superintendent of the Pennsylvania State Police outlines his views on the subject for International News Service.)

HARRISBURG, Dec. 31—(INS)—
Major Lynn G. Adams, superintendent of the State Police, today offered two New Year's resolutions to the average citizen to enable him to aid police in suppressing crime.

The veteran police head suggested
all citizens resolve:

1. To furnish at all times, willingly, any information in their possession which may even remotely appear to be connected with law violation.

2. Never to shirk taking the witness stand or serving on a jury as a necessary cog in the machinery of justice.
"I am frequently asked how the citizen can aid in solving the crime problem," Major Adams commented. "As a matter of fact the crime problem cannot be solved without the aid of the citizenry."

Pointing out that laws are usually enacted to promote the safety and comfort of those living under them,
Major Adams continued:

"The American citizen should not only respect the laws so enacted, but should support them wherever the opportunity presents itself. He should aid and inform the police whenever it is in his power to do so."

Major Adams declared that police in

LEGISLATURE FACES TREMENDOUS TASK

State Law Makers to Convene in Biennial Session
Tomorrow

FACE MANY PROBLEMS

By G. Everett Doying
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

HARRISBURG, Dec. 31—(INS)—
Fiscal problems of almost unprecedented magnitude top the list of tasks facing the 131st Pennsylvania Legislature convening in biennial session
tomorrow.

The Pennsylvania Chamber of Commerce has estimated that the lawmakers must find ways of more than doubling the state's present income to meet expenditures for the coming biennium. These figures have been confirmed from numerous other sources.

More pressing than this difficult assignment, however, is the problem of meeting the immediate emergency of relief and for stemming a looming general fund deficit at the end of the present two-year fiscal period.

At the present rate of expenditure, relief will cost $20,000,000 from February 1 to May 31. The general fund deficit has been estimated variously at between $10,000,000 and upwards of $18,000,000 although Gov. Gifford Pin-chot insists that if all collections are made there will be a cash balance.

Appropriations which are expected to be needed to carry the state through the next two years exceed $200,000,000 without considering relief.
Income on the present tax structure will run about $138,000,000 during the next two years.

But fiscal problems are not the only ones facing the incoming legislature, predominantly composed of uninitiated members and divided politically for the first time in half a century, with Democrats controlling the House.

Governor-elect George H. Earle has pledged himself to act for immediate revision of the constitution. Legislative action setting in motion machinery to elect delegates to a convention and for submitting their draft to the people is expected to be taken during the session.

Throughout the meeting, which may extend into next June, a welter of social welfare and labor measures are expected to be before the solons for action. In addition to such measures as minimum wages, maximum hours, child labor prohibition, elimination of privately-paid deputy sheriffs, and the like, it is probable a state NRA bill be introduced and actively pushed.

Federal legislation along these lines,
particularly the incipient unemployment insurance measures, likely also will provide problems for the state lawmakers.

Changes in election laws, workmen's compensation laws and tightening of other state regulatory measures will be other problems. The legislature must act on milk control, inasmuch as the present legislation dies in April, 1935.

Much of the legislation which will be dumped into the hopper during the session—and a bumper crop is expected—will not be new. Many of the promises in the platforms of both major parties are subjects long sponsored by various civic organizations and citizens' leagues.

a guest for several days of Miss Marguerite Zimmerman, East Circle.

COMPANY OF SAFETY HAS A MEETING AND DINNER

Forty Men Gather for Annual Sessions at Fallington,
Saturday

OFFICERS ARE NAMED

FALLINGTON, Dec. 31—Edward Scarborough, who has been serving as vice-president of the Fallington Company of Safety, and who on Saturday presided at the annual meeting of the Company, due to the death of president Maurice Kirby, was named to the presidency.

Other officers named on Saturday:
Vice-president, Albert Hibbs; secretary, Herman Heavener; and treasurer, Clinton Neagle. The latter two were re-elected.

The annual session took place at the community hall. The directors went into session at 1.30 and at three o'clock the roll call took place.

Following transaction of business of this organization, which was perfected years ago to apprehend horse thieves, the group adjourned to the Lincoln Point restaurant for dinner.

There were 40 in attendance at the meeting and dinner.

Arrest Hulmeville Man For Drunken Driving

Alfred L. Moser, Main street, Hulme-ville, was arrested Saturday night and charged with operating an automobile while intoxicated.

Moser was taken into custody by Highway Patrolman Hand, South Langhorne barracks. He was brought to the Municipal Building here and examined by a physician. He was pronounced intoxicated.

Moser was given a hearing before Justice James Guy and held in $500 bail for court.

ple University, is president.

OPPOSES SOLDIERS' BONUS

Washington, D. C., Dec. 31—President Roosevelt made it clear again today he is against payment of the soldiers' bonus at this time. On the eve of Congress assembling, the President made public a letter he wrote to the American Legion in Texas in which he said those who are advocating payment of the bonus at this time certainly could not have given the interest of the veterans much thought. Unusual interest was attached to the President's opposition of the bonus at this time in view of the virtual certainty that both branches of Congress will approve it. The President's letter was a blunt indication that a veto awaits such congressional action. Mr.
Roosevelt's letter was addressed to Garland R. Farmer, commander of the Legion Post at Henderson, Texas, and was in reply to a request from Farmer for information on the bonus issue.

WILL INSTALL OFFICERS OF MIDDLETOWN GRANGE

At First Meeting of the New Year To Be Held In Langhorne

ON SECOND OF JANUARY

LANGHORNE, Dec. 31—Middletown Grange will conduct its first meeting of the new year in the Friends' School House, here, on Wednesday evening next. Recently elected officers are to be installed at that session by Isaac Gross, Plumsteadville.

One of the officers to be installed is Dr. H. C. Terry, who again becomes Master, after serving in that capacity several years ago.

The last meeting for the old year was held recently at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Howard B. Austin and was devoted to giving of reports of the sessions of the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Grange held in Hershey. These reports were given by Mr. Austin, the retiring master of the local Grange; Mrs. Austin; the incoming master, Dr. H. C. Terry; Mrs. Terry, and Mr. and Mrs. William
P. Newbold.

Following the reports a brief
Christmas program was presented by the members.

Sent To Jail For Making Disturbance In Theatre

James Mandvill, 1104 Radcliffe street, was arrested Saturday night for creating a disturbance in the Grand Theatre. Mandvill, according to the evidence, indulged in loud talking in the theatre and then it is alleged he drank from a bottle.

Edward Lynn, manager of the theatre, appeared at a hearing against Mandvill. The case was heard by Justice of Peace James Guy.

Mr. Lynn stated that under no condition could such actions be tolerated in the Grand Theatre and that he was prepared to push the case to the limit.

Mandvill was sentenced to 30 days
in jail.

86,000 PIECES OF MAIL CANCELLED IN 4 DAYS

Tops Total for Christmas Season of Last Year by
About 16,000

IMPROVEMENT IS SEEN

If the number of pieces of mail placed in the Bristol post office for delivery to thousands of towns and cities is any criterion of improvement as far as the depression is concerned, times are better.

This is shown by the fact that 86,000 pieces were cancelled at the Bristol office from Wednesday evening, December 19th, until Monday evening, December 24th.

This total includes all types of matterial—parcel post packages, first class matter, etc.

The number, according to employees at the Bristol post office tops the total of last Christmas season by several thousands, the number for the few days prior to Christmas of 1932 being about 70,000.

It is also stated that the quantity of mail received here for delivery to localities was unusually high this year, telling in plain figures that Christmas was a better one than for many years in this area.

Patrons at Grand Will See New Year In in Fine Style

The old year will be ushered out and the new year ushered in in grand style at the Grand Theatre tonight and tomorrow. There will be shows given to meet everybody's whims and everybody's time.

Tonight at seven and nine the attraction will be Richard Arlen in "Ready for Love" with Ida Lupino and Marjorie Rambeau. This is one of those captivating stories presented in a manner that is entertaining and wholesome. A surrounding, especially selected bill consists of Phil Spitzley's Orchestra; a musical comedy, "The Spectacle Maker"; a cartoon, "Viva Willie," and news events.

At the stroke of midnight a big New Year's party has been arranged for all who care to see the new year in. There will be noise makers of every description and fun for everyone. There will be an entirely different feature picture shown at this performance only.
Thelma Todd will be seen in a laugh
riot entitled, "You Made Me Love
You." On New Year's Day James Cagney will be seen in "St. Louis Kid" at both matinee and evening shows.
There will also be shown on the same programme a musical comedy done in technicolor, "Parole Parole."

Charles Young Found
Dead; Lived Here 50 Years

A well known Bristol colored man was found dead in bed yesterday at his place of employment, Fifth and Chestnut streets, Philadelphia. The deceased, Charles Young, is believed to have died of a heart attack.

Mr. Young was a native of Virginia and was 72 years of age. He had lived in Bristol 50 years and his 52nd wedding anniversary was today. His wife died last February 19th.

The deceased is survived by three sisters, one niece and two nephews.
He had been employed as night watchman at Fifth and Chestnut for the past seven years.

The body will be brought to Bristol today and funeral arrangements will be under the direction of the H. S. Rue Estate.

street, entertained a group of young people at her home Friday evening.
Games and dancing were enjoyed and refreshments served to Violet Burton,
wood, Betty Shields, George Whitcoe, Harry Seebold, James Jeffries, Peggy
Phipps, Wagner Carter, and James Vanzant.

58 PERCENT MORE DRUNKEN DRIVERS DURING PAST YEAR

Records of Quarter Sessions
Court Show Many More
Arrested

209 DEFENDANTS

Only 29 Defendants in The County Charged With Burglary in 1934

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 31—There were 58 per cent. more defendants charged with drunken driving in 1934 than there were in 1933, official records at the office of the Clerk of Quarter Sessions Court of Bucks County show.

Quarter Sessions Court Clerk Theodore Yuchum, of Quakertown, and Deputy Clerk Miss Rae Myers, Doylestown, have compiled a report of criminal court work for 1934, and although drunken driving is on the steady increase, there were 6.04 per cent. fewer defendants before the court in 1934 than in 1933.

All told there were 209 defendants sentenced this year in addition to cases pending in which 11 defendants are involved.

It is interesting to know that in Bucks county in 1934 there were only 29 defendants charged with burglary, breaking or entering, compared to 63 cases in 1933, a decrease of more than 50 per cent. Defendants charged with larceny in 1934 numbered 32, an increase of 12 over 1933.

No defendants were sentenced to the death penalty this year. There were three murder cases, one being disposed of with a plea of guilty and sentenced, while the other two were dismissed by the prosecution.

There were forty-nine defendants charged with operating their automobiles while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. Two were dismissed by the prosecution, thirty-nine pleaded guilty, forty-five were sentenced, and only four were acquitted by juries.
Thirteen were sentenced to prison and fined. Eighteen were fined and not sent to prison. Twelve were placed on probation with a money payment.
Two drunken drivers were convicted by juries.

There were 295 defem...s before the court in 1934, including all cases, three of them being carried over from the previous year, leaving 292 new defendants. Fifty-five defendants were dismissed by the prosecution.
Thirteen defendants waived the right of a jury and were acquitted by the court. Twenty-three defendants were acquitted by juries in 1934.

There were 146 pleas of guilty taken in 1934. Seventeen defendants were found guilty by the Court and thirty-one defendants were convicted by juries of offenses charged, while eight others were found guilty of a lesser offense than charged. At the close of the 1934 criminal court business there were 11 cases pending before the Court, including eleven defendants seeking new trials. All told there were 209 defendants sentenced this year by President Judge Hiram H.
Keller and Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

The yearly record shows that 29 adult defendants were sentenced to prisons and reformatories, in addition to being fined. Forty-one defendants were sentenced to the County Prison and fined. Thirty-three defendants were fined and directed to pay the costs too, while 25 defendants were sentenced to pay the costs. Eleven defendants were directed to make restitution or directed to pay a support order with or without costs.

A YEAR OF PROMISE

Like "a living jewel, dropped unstained from Heaven," comes the New Year, unsullied, untarnished, sparkling with promise. Our yesterdays lie buried with the joys and sorrows of the past. We face the coming days with courage and belief prophetic of moral, spiritual and material accomplishments.

The seconds, the minutes, the hours, the days, the weeks, the months we live are ours to do with as we see fit, to be made milestones of worth or waste, to be molded into cycles of happiness, success, cheer, smiles and sunshine or into aftermaths of penitence, melancholy, failure, distress or regret. They must be before us like the Roman legions awaiting the courageous and dauntless leadership which knows neither fear nor perturbation.

We live in a world beset with problems, many conceived through timidity or undue alarm. Yet we still remain as masters of our own destinies, captains of our fortunes and pilots of our futures. Our responsibilities in shaping our course over troublesome seas, or through calm waters, should not be taken lightly. The successful culmination of our efforts will make us worthy of the life given us while failure will stamp us as weaklings unworthy of the bountiful fruits of the earth.

And so, as the New Year dawns, let each of us look toward a rising sun with new hope, with trust and joyful expectancy; and in the end we shall embrace the great gladness and contentment that come through abiding faith and confidence.

THE EARTH IN A MIRROR

The initial report of comparative observations of the earth and the planet Mars made at the Mount Wilson Observatory, bears out the belief that there is no life on Mars in any form that we can comprehend. It even rules out such imaginative creatures as splay-toed, frog-like creatures and it indicates that there is nothing even resembling the forms of vegetation common to the earth.

All this is chiefly a confirmation of beliefs that are by no means new in scientific circles. But what is new enough to be highly interesting is the manner in which this proof was gathered. The moon was used as a kind of mirror by means of which spectral photographs of the earth were taken. A spectrum analysis of these photographs was then compared with similar analyses of Mars, and new proof was at hand concerning the atmosphere of both.

Thus the scientists, by applying modern technique to venerable knowledge of reflected and refracted light, gained new information. And a man sitting on a mountain, by using his brains and the accumulated knowledge of many other men, got a scientific look at the earth from, to all practical purposes, a point 239,000 miles away. There is something rather magnificent in that, something just a bit awe-inspiring.

Love always triumphs. No matter how fast science makes the automobile, love pulls it down to miles per hour.

SHAMROCKS SPLIT DOUBLE-HEADER HERE

The Shamrocks split a double-header on the Beaver Fire Company floor, Saturday night, losing to the Catholic Boys Club in the second half after swamping the Harriman No-Names in the initial fray. Score in the first game was 45-25 while the second ended with the count, 24-17.

The first match was a walk-away for the Shamies. They scored at will and at half-time held 26-15 lead. This was gradually increased as the second half commenced. Roe, Rue, and Cole were the high scorers with 38 points divided among them.

Utter detachment? Perhaps. At least she hoped so. It was a bit uncomfortable, this business coming so close to home. Perhaps Harrow did love her.

But did that mean that one of these days he would be offering her marriage? She wondered.

All the way into town, bound for her appointment with Ben Leschin, she pondered this situation. And wishing Pete were at hand. The discovery surprised her greatly. Pete. What could Pete do for her? Yet thoughts of Pete remained. And Boris Warren and Earl Harrow, two undeniably attractive men, remained.

Kay smiled at the thought that when she returned in the evening Ida Campbell would be there. And then what?

"BEACH BEAUTY" by ARTHUR SHUMWAY

CHAPTER XLII

"Men and women look at these things from entirely different viewpoints. A man likes a girl a whole lot and he wants her, he wants to marry her or to have her all for himself. And a girl, on the other hand, when she's as young as I am, appreciates that, but she also appreciates lots of attention. It isn't being fickle, Pete. . . b, maybe it is! But it isn't, in the usual sense. It's just that she likes to have men interested in her and wants to be able to make up her own mind about them, and it isn't really as easy as it might sound, Pete. We're all very different, you know, and probably no two men are alike any more than any two women are. You told me you loved me, Pete—"

"I do," he said quietly.

"I believe you. Well, don't you see? The natural things I do and think and feel that wouldn't matter otherwise can hurt you under these circumstances, and I don't want them to! Please believe me, Pete; you're the last person in the world I'd want to hurt."

"I believe you."

"Well, then, do you see it a little bit? Do you see my position? I can't say I'm in love with you—at least, not the way you seem to be with me. I'd be lying to you just to make you feel better."

He nodded grimly, trying again to smile. His teeth were clenched tightly and his lips were drawn thin.

"And I can't say I love Earl any more—any more than I could say I love Boris Warren. He's fond of me, Pete. You can see that. Suppose I lied to all of you, if I had to. Oh, this is silly. I must sound too self-centered for words—"

"No, I see your point, Kay. And I agree with you. Honestly, I do. You're doing absolutely the only thing you could do."

"I hope you do really think so, Pete. Because I'm trying to do the right thing. Pete, I'd marry you tonight if that would be enough and would make you happy and keep you from being hurt because of me."

"No . . .," he said, his voice painfully under control. "No . . . Kay. That would never do."

"I would, though. But I'd be afraid that might even be worse. All I want to do is the right thing, Pete. You tell me. Is there anything I can do? I don't think I'm in love with Earl Harrow. I know I'm not. I won't lie and say I'm not terribly attracted to him, because I am, but I'm not in love with him. It isn't just that. I'm terribly attracted to you, too, in a different way."

"There's nothing for you to do, Pete. I said, his face turned away. 'I'll do all there is to be done. I'm leaving here today. I'd have to stay. Then I'm going to wire to New Orleans and see if they'll still have me.'"

"In Guatemala?" she said, incredulously.

Pete nodded. "Hard work. That's the program. It's the best method all the way around. I don't fit into this kind of business at all. I'll be perfectly honest. I only tagged along because I thought that sooner or later there'd be a chance for me with you, but I can see what would happen. Even if you gave me such a chance I'd only hold you down."

Kay seized his hand and held it against her cheek. Tears dropped upon the tough brown skin.

"To think, as long as we've known each other and have been together, that we'd ever find ourselves in a position of this sort, doing things like this to each other," she said, fighting down the little sobs that rose in her throat.

"I know," he said. "But it must be part of growing up. We all have to do it sometime. Ten years from now we may be the best of friends. I'll come up from the tropics for a holiday in New York and we'll have supper together after your current show. And we'll even be able to smile at all this."

"Oh—Pete!" She kissed him quickly and ran out of the room.

In her own room, she threw herself on the bed and sobbed.

Later when she went downstairs she inquired of one of the servants and found that Pete had gone.

She found Harrow.

"Did Pete leave his address?"

Harrow shook his head, pursing his lips studiously.

"I feel terrible," she said. "Am I so awful, Earl?"

Harrow slipped his arm around her shoulder. "Not at all," he said.

"I've known lots of girls and you're one of the finest, one of the most honest and genuine I've ever seen."

She looked up at him and knew he was telling the truth as he saw it.

"It's grand of you to say that," she said. "It makes up for a whole lot I've been thinking about myself."

"If we spent all our time hating ourselves, Kay, some of us never would get anything done. I for one."

Boris Warren came into the room. He was wearing an old soiled white sweatshirt and corduroy trousers.

"I understand Ryan has gone," he said. "No chance of saying goodbye?"

"Afraid not, Boris," Harrow replied.

"Sorry. I liked Ryan."

Boris seemed to be deep in meditation as he spoke, but Kay sensed something that his deep eyes were studying them shrewdly.

"Well—too bad," Boris concluded, ambling lazily through the room.

The telephone rang and Harrow was called.

When he returned he looked quizzically at Kay, showed her a drawing at the corner of his mouth.

"We've another guest on the way," he said.

"Yes?"

"Ida Campbell."

"Ida Campbell?" Kay repeated.

"None other," Harrow said.

"She's coming here, you mean?"

"She is, indeed. She just now phoned. She's been visiting someone in Washington and ran up for a few days, I guess. It'll be good to see her again."

"Yes," Kay agreed, mechanically, "yes, it will."

"I've felt rather guilty for the scene and the docking ship just that day in the ocean," Harrow remarked, laughing. "I hope she'll forgive me for that."

"Oh, she will," Kay said. "I'm sure she will."

Kay hoped she wasn't sounding caty; it would be so easy.

"Quite a union we'll be having then. We'll have to have a party or two," Harrow suggested.

"Yes."

"Excuse me," he said, "I'm going to send a car in for her."

Alone, Kay began to ponder upon this turn. Ida Campbell's coming to visit meant only one thing: Ida Campbell still hadn't given up the idea of catching or at least utilizing Earl Harrow.

And Harrow hadn't given up his interest, whatever it was, in Ida; that was clear. He was obviously glad to have her visit him.

An amusing idea struck Kay: What if Ida didn't know she was there, too? And probably she didn't. Kay began to chuckle in anticipation of Ida's surprise; Boris Warren strolled back into the room.

"You so often seem amused," he observed slowly. "I envy you."

"You do? But you needn't."

"No?"

"I came over, puffing slowly on his stained clay pipe."

"We're going to have company here," Kay said.

"More of us, eh? Who this time?"

"A girl from Daytona. Ida Campbell. Did Mr. Harrow speak of her?"

Boris shook his head.

"Not another actress?" he asked, half humorously.

"You can't tell," Kay said.

"Earl is fond of her?"

"I imagine so."

"Good," Boris drew a puff of satisfaction from his pipe.

"You're pleased?"

"I am," he said. "Very. I want you to myself."

"And you think it's as simple as that?" she asked with good-natured sarcasm.

He shook his head. "I wish it were."

"You're at least frank, Boris."

"In my little world . . ." he said simply, leaving the sentence unfinished.

"Yes . . . of course," Kay said.

"I've been thinking of an interesting experiment," Boris said. "I'm still working on the play. Week-ends around here one couldn't accomplish much. Harrow wants me to stay right here, but it doesn't help the work at all. And with more guests there will be parties."

"They're being planned already," Kay offered.

"Naturally. Well, Kay, week-ends, at least, I'm going to have to escape. Yet the play is not for me; it is not for Harrow; it is for you. Unless it's your play and you feel it's your play, you won't be giving yourself the full opportunity. Do you see that?"

"I suppose you're right."

"When do you work with Leschin?"

"I'm to have a session with him again this afternoon—at the Manhattan," Kay replied.

"I see," Boris said, removing the pipe and studying the ashes in its charred bowl. "But your week-ends are to be free?"

"As far as I know."

"You've a little shack in Connecticut," Boris explained. "It isn't mine. I don't own a stick or an inch of soil anywhere and I pray to the gods I never shall. No, this place belongs to a sculptor friend of mine. And now he happens to be away and I have use of it. He is in Berlin."

Kay began to see the whole picture, but she decided to wait until Boris had had his say. There was no telling what he might suggest. He was as natural and candid a person as ever she had met and she respected his obvious sincerity.

"I should like to work directly with you," Boris went on. "When I wrote the play I had real people in mind. You must know that."

"I rather thought so from what I heard," she admitted.

"Yes, and now I have another real person in mind. The play is the same essentially. The locale."

He shrugged those huge shoulders.

"Harrow was surprised how willingly I agreed to change it. The locale is not the important thing. It is the person I have in mind that is the important thing. When I did 'Sad Exile' I was in Tahiti and had Gauguin in mind. When I did this play I was in Newfoundland and I had some one else in mind. That is over now, and now that it is you who must carry this burden of my work I must have you in mind."

Boris stopped and looked at her with a shy smile.

"I should say that I could have no choice now," he said. "So I must know you better. I must understand you with the same intensity I did Gauguin and the woman who was first in this play. I must know you as I knew that woman."

"I see," Kay said, matter-of-factly, but pleasantly.

"I want you with me, then, this week-end. I want to love you as completely as I must have loved that other woman."

"That's it, then?" Kay asked quietly.

"Yes, that is it."

"Boris," she began slowly, being careful what she said, "you're the most interesting man I ever met. I thought until I met you that Earl Harrow was."

"Thank you," he said with a boyish nod.

"I like you very much."

"Thank you for that, too."

"You needn't. It's not my fault. Well, one thing I like about you is your honesty, your candor. I'll try to be just as honest. I don't love you. I don't love Harrow; I don't know that I love or ever have loved anybody. And when I do love someone enough to marry him, that's what I intend to do—marry him."

"Nicely and concisely put," Boris commented. "And you didn't take offense, which is by far the best part of it."

"Why should I take offense?" Kay asked.

"I'm beginning to believe that you're wandering gradually over into my little world. Aren't you, perhaps?"

"Maybe I am—a little. It is an intriguing world."

"A couple of days yet," he said.

"Friday I'll ask you again. And be honest with Kay Owen. You owe nothing in this world. Remember that."

Kay smiled. Again the advice she had heard from the three of them: Be honest with yourself. Three men, so different, yet each giving her the same advice as to their relationships. And of the three, she was not sure that in some ways Boris Warren didn't make the deepest impression. He made her feel a little giddy, a little reckless, as if she were only beginning to know herself, and she thought new that this might be dangerous.

HEALTH, HAPPINESS ARE BOTH PROMOTED BY GOOD LIGHTING

By Rhondena A. Armstrong (Home Economics Representative)

Short days are coming along with the need of more artificial light. As the family gathers in the home for the evening activities: lessons for the children in school, sewing, mending, or reading for mother, and for father his daily paper or favorite magazine, good light is essential for health and happiness.

There are several excellent sources of light for the farm home which is not supplied with electricity. Regardless of the type of lighting system used certain principles should be observed.

There should be sufficient light to allow one to see clearly and distinctly without eye strain.

The lamp should be so placed that the light falls over the left shoulder for reading, that hands when working do not throw a shadow upon the work, and that light is not reflected back from the work surface into the eyes of the worker. A shade on the lamp can be used to regulate much of this, as well as soften the glare of the light.

The source of light should be steady. Reflected light from shiny surfaces should be avoided. Lamps free from noise or odor when burning and which are attractive whether lighted or not should be used. More than one lamp is often needed in a room if several are to work there. Lamps that are simple in design, harmonizing in color with the room furnishings, and especially serving the purpose for which intended should be selected.
